Congressman Peter Roskam 2700 International Drive, Suite 304 West Chicago, IL 60185 F: (630) 232-7393 To whom it may concern,

My journey through the enlistment process was not an easy one. It was 2009 when I first walked into a military recruiting office. I was finishing my Associates degree soon, and wanted to know what kind of programs the military had for me. At the time I was talking to an Air Force recruiter and was met with a less that welcoming attitude. I was overweight at 298lbs and I was told by the recruiter that if I lost 80lbs we could talk. When I tried to take a pamphlet home with me he stopped me and told me that I wouldn't need those until I lost the 80lbs. I went home that night with mixed feelings but I remembered that anything in life worth doing is worth fighting for. It was a long and difficult journey but through hard work and dedication I finally lost the weight and decided to try again.

This time I thought I would see what the Navy could offer me. When I walked into the door to the Navy recruiting office it was a much more welcoming atmosphere. They talked to me about my interests and what I was looking to do for the Navy. I simply told them I wanted the hardest, most challenging job that the Navy could offer me in the scientific field. The recruiting officer had me take the practice test in the office and I scored in the top 80 percentile. They explained to me that if I was willing to work hard and dedicate my time that the Navy Nuclear Power program is where I belonged. Over the next few weeks I gladly did everything they asked of me at a moment's notice, I had to study, fill out countless papers, give references, and even went to Great Lakes to meet with a Nuclear Power Coordinator; all while working full time and taking college classes. They put me under a microscope in order to test me, and every time I passed.

Finally the day had come For MEPS, I passes my physical exam with no issues and took the official ASVAB. I scored in the top 95 percentile overall, and my baseline scores for the individual categories auto-qualified me to sign for the Navy's Nuclear Power Program. There was only one issue, I was slightly too old for the program being 27. I was told not to worry it was only a formality but there was a waiver which I could easily get, especially with how well I had done.

I was very surprised when I heard the news that the age waiver was turned down, not once but twice. The first time they told me that I was too old to be put in an academic setting, that after a certain age it's just too difficult to teach me the materials. This struck me as interesting because I have over 150 college credit hours and take classes as a community college for fun in my spare time. The second reason was given that the Nuclear Power School was having problems with older students purchasing alcohol for minors. This being a serious problem I can understand taking steps to prevent it; however, I have nothing on my record to indicate that I would ever preform such a task, nor do I intend to.

After many talks with various people in the Navy, they are currently reviewing my age waiver for a third time now. I am proud to be a member of the Unites States Navy, I want to push myself, and dedicate my life to being the best that I can be for them. I am only asking for the opportunity to do so. I have met every challenge they have given me, taken every test, and proved that I am capable of doing the job. So I simply ask you to look at my accomplishments instead of my age.
